The Lime Kiln Club

A Question Of Privilege

WHEN the routine business of the meeting had been disposed of at the gathering of the Lime Kiln club the other Saturday evening Colonel Longback Green arose and said:

"Mr. President, I arise to question of privilege same as dey do in congress. You has heard of congressmen arise?"

"I have, sah," replied Brother Gardner. "What you got on your mind, Brudder Green?"

"It am dis sah," continued the brother. "I stole into a butcher shop de odder day and said I would take a pot-house steak dat weighed about three pounds. De butcher looked at me sharply and axed me if I had cash to pay for it. Take notice, Mr. President, he doubted my financial standin' and thereby insulted me."

"I take notice, Brudder Green, and at de same time I say dat de butcher has good common sense in his head. Go on."

"I told dat butcher dat I would pay for de steak next day, and he replied dat dere was no next day in his business. Took notice, Mr. President, dat dis was insult No. 2."

"I still insist, Brudder Green," replied the president, "dat de butcher was a wise man. Did you argy wid him?"

"I told him dat I was Colonel Longback Green, and he replied he didn't care two cents who I was. Dat was insult No. 3."

"I see."

"I told him dat I belonged to de Lime Kiln club, and he replied dat fact was no more to him dan if I belonged to de liver and bacon club. He called me a nigger, said my ears were too big and my heels too long and my hair was too full of kinks. He said dat, sah, knowin' I was a member of dis club in de highest standin'."

"Ars! It hurt your feelin's, did it, Brudder Green?"

"It did, sah."

"Well, a part of de people of dis country still call us by de name of nigger. Instead of callin' folks, I don't know it's a handy word to use. As to your personal appearance, Brudder Green, your ears are very large, as all kin see. When natur' made your heels so made 'em rather long, and you must have noticed when lookin' in de glass dat your hair kin kinked up fast as it was bo'n to be. Am dat all?"

"No, sah," was de emphatic reply. "De wust an yit to come. I was tellin' dat butcher dat I would carry my custom elsewhere when he seized me by de collar and took me to de doah and kicked me, sah. He kicked me seven times, sah. He knowed I was Colonel Longback Green. He knowed I belonged to dis club. And yet he kicked me, sah. He kicked me frow de doah and on de sidewalk."

"Well, Brudder Green, you went in dat butcher shop not to ask foh meat to make a mutton steak, but foh meat of de highest price. You hasn't any money in your pocket. You was goin' to git dat pot-house steak on check, and de butcher knowed it, and he had a right to feel angry 'bout it. You has arose to a question of privilege, same as dey do in congress, and now you kin set down again. You has made yoh remarks, sah, and you is overruled."

Brother Longback Green hesitated a moment and then sat down with a bump and looked very disconsolate de rest of de evening.
